Occupational Health and Farmworkers: Partnerships and Progress

Friday, March 16
12:00 pm – 1:00 pm

College of Public Health and Health Professions
Room G-312

Dr. McCauley has more than two decades of community-based participatory research with farmworker populations throughout the United States. Her work integrates sophisticated scientific measures within a framework of community engagement and research translation. This presentation will describe the evolution of academic/community partnerships between Emory University and the Farmworker Association of Florida (FWAF) that have focused on farmworker health and safety issues including pesticide exposure and heat-related illness. Dr. McCauley will discuss major findings, publications, research translation mechanisms, and future research directions.
